

Paul Mitchell

Born in East Yorkshire, Paul's interest for photography began whilst still at school.

He then studied graphic design at art college and began his design career in London working on many well known brands.

He now lives and runs his own design consultancy in Buckinghamshire and tries to devote most of his free time to photographing the landscape.

Paul has had numerous exhibitions in London and the South East and has had articles and images published in many photographic magazines. He is a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society and currently serves on the Fine Art Distinction Panel. He's also a member of the prestigious Arena group of Photographers and a founder member of Landscape Collective UK (LCUK). Apart from his self published book on pinhole photography he has also collaborated with four renowned photographers to publish "The Coast".

Paul has also been successful in the prestigious Landscape Photographer of the Year competition, receiving the Sunday Times Choice Award in 2013 and the Urban Category winner in 2015. He has also had recent successes in the Outdoor Photographer of the Year and the International Garden Photographer of the Year.
